William Hogarth FRSA (/ ? h o? ? ??r ? /; 10 November 1697 – 26 October 1764) was an English painter, printmaker, pictorial satirist, social critic, and editorial cartoonist.His work ranges from realistic portraiture to comic strip-like series of pictures called "modern moral subjects", and he is perhaps best known for his series A Harlot's Progress, A Rake's Progress and Marriage A-la ...

William Hogarth - Wikipedia
Hogarth is best known for his series paintings of 'modern moral subjects', of which he sold engravings on subscription. The Collection contains the set called 'Marriage A-la-Mode'. Although pugnaciously hostile to Continental art, he succumbed to French influence. In 1753 he published his 'Analysis of Beauty', in which he stresses the importance of the serpentine line.

William Hogarth (1697 - 1764) | National Gallery, London
Hogarth indignantly sought and obtained public vindication with the help of professional witnesses, including Thornhill. Their testimony was amply justified by his first dated painting, The Beggar's Opera (1728), a scene from John Gay 's popular farce, which emphasized Hogarth's prevailing interests: his involvement with the theatre and with down-to-earth, comic subjects.

Hogarth was the first Modernist artist, a man who left us stories that are as insightful about his own time as they are about our own. Hogarth's 'modern moral subjects' as he called them are not concerned with morality as such but with the duality of human nature. His greatest creation Tom Rakewell in the Rake's Progress series of ...

By 1747 Hogarth could knowingly depict his "Industrious Apprentice", Francis Goodchild, entrusted with a large silk-ribbon manufactory in Spitalfields, on his way to becoming Lord Mayor of London. This reflects both the wealth of the silk weaving community and its increasing importance to the broader London economy. The decline of silk weaving in the late eighteenth century, as new Indian and ...
