After the LX-5, Nakamichi entered the entry level decks with their BX series. Having heard a couple of those BX models – the 100 and 150, in particular – I can tell you that those two will not hold up against the LX-3. So, the claim of owners that the LX-3 was one if the last greats may hold some truth to it.

The LX-3 is a fantastic deck in that it has most of the ingredients that makes classic Naks so sought after. The transport is the same as your 303. Same heads, same everything. It has Dolby C, a digital counter and a bias adjustment as upgrades from a base unit like the 480.

Nakamichi LX-3 This is posted in a thread in the cassette section, but I thought it might be of interest to "store" in the restore section as well, since I took a whole lot of photos during fixing this deck into shape. When starting out on this deck, I first noted the sign on the back stating "110V AC" and a strange, old, looking plug.

(Nakamichi had been around a while before that, making RTR's and other bits and bobs for other company's, and also in the late 50s for themselves under the Fidela brand name, rarely encountered though outside of Japan.. but I would refer you to the various Wiki's for that history rather than regurgitate it here.) That monumental event of course was the introduction of the 1000 and with ...

The Nakamichi LX-5 has been a completely enjoyable part of my system for nearly twenty years, since I first bought the deck when stationed in Japan. I was in the market for a Nak, and wanted to buy a fancier deck, like the ZX-7 or 9. The aesthetics of the LX weren't quite as becoming as the ZX decks. Instead of flashy lights and buttons, the LX is plain. Yet, as I listened, I realised that ...
